Function of State Agency

Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services

The Department recognizes the dignity and worth of each citizen. This means the acceptance of a mutual responsibility for one individual whose own strengths and resources are insufficient for maintenance.

Among the rights of the individual is that of developing capacities to the greatest extent possible. When there is an economic, social, mental, or physical deterrent to this development it is essential to assist toward the realization of the person's full ability to be a contributing member of society.

The Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services views as its responsibility the formulating and carrying out of a program of services designed to promote the welfare of all the people of the state by enhancing the individual's opportunities for fulfillment of this right and to aid the individual's assumption of personal responsibilities in society.
